Hazardous Weather

Tonight into Wednesday has a good chance at precipitation across the region. Rain, freezing rain, and snow are all possible with a small chance for a rumble or two of thunder. Freezing rain is favored tonight into tomorrow morning as we transition to all rain Tuesday, while snow is favored Tuesday night into Wednesday. Roads may become slick, especially bridges and overpasses.

It will be cooler today with highs in the 50s and 60s for most, and 70s confined to the Rio Grande Valley and Big Bend. Clouds will increase through this afternoon, with mostly cloudy skies expected by this evening. Overnight, fog and light rain/drizzle will develop across the Permian Basin and portions of SE New Mexico and the Lower Trans Pecos, so plan ahead if you'll be out and about tonight, as the fog/drizzle could produce some dangerous travel conditions through early Tuesday morning.
